Incoming CBCP head asserts position

THE TOUGH GETS GOING. Gloria Macapagal Arroyo delivers a fighting speech before thousands of protesters at the People Power Movement along EDSA on Wednesday afternoon. "I am with you," she says, "whatever you want to do."

PRESIDENT MACAPAGAL-Arroyo may have survived an impeachment attempt, but ranking members of the influential Catholic Bishops Conference of the Philippines yesterday indicated that her government would be far from smooth.

In Bulu City, June Archbishop Angel Lagdameo, incoming president of the 80-member CBCP and the only bishop to sign the impeachment complaint in July, said he still is in the midst of the impeachment complaint was "not the end of the road."

"The search for truth goes on," the prelate said yesterday. "Did the President cheat or not? Was the 2004 election rigged in her favor or not? (The impeachment process) should not be resolved by the courts."

Lagdameo pointed out that while the pro-arrest senators in the House had insisted that they were speaking from their conscience and voting according to the wishes of their constituents, they merely claimed to be "listening to the people."

He said it was Mr. Arroyo who held the key to getting at the truth. "The President is the issue. What is the truth that [she] is hiding on us, when is the truth that [she] is trying to hide? That is what we would like to know only she, in her conscience, can tell."

Lagdameo said the impeached president and legislators against her impeachment would have to address the United Nations Security Council next week.

"The people are looking for a government that is honest and just," he said.

THAT CERTAIN SHALL President Arroyo leaves for her public appearance after the majority members of the House of Representatives voted not to file impeachment complaint that night last.

Palace: Not a costly win, just lotsa' pork

By Gil C. Cabacungan Jr., Philip C. Salazar and Norman Borlengue

IMPEACHMENT VICTORY meant a similar price a simple victory can give an opponent in congressional elections to the House of Representatives who opposed the impeachment case against President Macapagal-Arroyo.

Continuity to victory again, this was a special accommodation for disgraced President Joseph Estrada who said that was not his first congressional victory. He said he would like to begin work in his post-2004 Arroyo impeachment case.

Arroyo said that it is all the only consolation the President gave the lawmakers was in fact the release of pork barrel funds.

Swift dismissal agitated soldiers, warns Biazon

By TJ Buzones and Luigi A. del Puerto

SIN RODRIGO BIAZON 7th today warned President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo administration that the swift dismissal of the impeachment committee against her had agitated a section of the Armed Forces of the Philippines.

Biazon, chair of the Senate committee on internal defense, said he received a call from a soldier today from an officer. "They are not as quiet as before," he said. "They are agitated because of what happened to the impeachment process. They are disappointed."

The defense AFP chief of staff said the duty of the military is to protect the country, not to get involved in political issues.

Biazon said that the soldiers are not agitated because of the impeachment process, but because of the political crisis.

Defensor ordered to reopen peace talks with Erap

Environment Secretary Michael Defensor, the President's handpicked conduit to Estrada, yesterday said he had been instructed to waste no time in reopening channels to Estrada for a possible reconciliation.

According to Defensor, Ms Arroyo believes that this is an "opportune time" to seek reconciliation with Estrada and other leaders of the opposition because "passions" should have died down with the completion of the impeachment process.

But Estrada himself told the INQUIRER that he was not about to reconcile with Ms Arroyo.

"It's not yet time. Just like me, she should have her day in court," he said by phone.

Estrada wanted to know "what kind of reconciliation" was being talked about.

"One week before [El Shaddai's] Brother Mike Velarde's [birthday celebration last month], he asked me to shake Ms Arroyo's hand onstage. I refused. Why do so now?" he said.

Estrada also reiterated that he was not cutting a compromise deal with the Arroyo administration that would include his release on bail or recognizance in exchange for certain political concessions for the President.

No secret deals

The House on Tuesday overwhelmingly voted to trash the impeachment case against the President, which means that any new impeachment effort cannot be launched until after a year.

Just minutes after the last lawmaker explained his vote, Ms Arroyo issued a statement stating in part: "The opposition put up a good fight and I now offer my hand in reconciliation for the national interest."

But Malacañang itself was quick to deny speculation that it had reached an agreement with Estrada regarding his detention and the plunder case against him, or that it had agreed to allow the burial of the late dictator Ferdinand Marcos at the Libingan ng mga Bayani.

"We don't know any secret deals," Executive Secretary Eduardo Ermita told reporters at a briefing. "In the first place, if it is a secret, why would I tell you? I'd just be punished [for revealing a secret]. But the truth is I really have no knowledge [of any secret deal]."

Ermita said many people were presuming that Malacañang knew why certain proimpeachment lawmakers did not attend the plenary session or did not vote.

"It's a wrong assumption," he said.

But Ermita himself declared that Malacañang remained open to all "possibilities" in its effort to reconcile with opposition forces.

"There is nothing impossible, but I am not saying that [these] are being discussed at all," he said.

Olive branch

In Lapulapu City, the President last night offered an "olive branch of peace" to her "critics and detractors," seeking "a principled partnership for the people with a responsible governance and responsible fiscalization."

Ms Arroyo delivered her speech at the culmination of the National Summit of Religious Leaders Toward Culture of Peace at the Crown Regency Hotel.

She said she planned to leave a clear message to the United Nations Security Council that "we are all working for one Philippines just as we all have one God."

"This moment is significant for me because this is my first public appearance since yesterday. Yesterday, Congress spoke, and I thanked them," she said.

Ms Arroyo also thanked Cebu City Rep. Raul del Mar, House deputy speaker in the Visayas, who was in the audience, for scheduling a marathon impeachment session.

"Congress spoke with a mighty voice for the people they represent. And I thank them," she said, adding:

"Their voice is clear. Let us work for peace, not for conflict. Let us go back to work and not to the streets but to our offices, industrial centers, in our farms and in our community. Let's bury the conflict of the past and gather around for a brighter and peaceful tomorrow.

"We must transform the weariness of our people to a fresh dynamism for action, enterprise and reform."

Getting down to work

Ms Arroyo also said she had instructed her Cabinet to buckle down to work and "let the people feel in their bones and hearts and experience the power of honest and efficient service."

"We have to work now. We have to get the budget debate underway," she said.

She also raised the need to work on Charter change: "As I extend the hand of peace to my own detractors, I will invite all Filipinos, my critics and supporters alike, to an earnest and sincere debate to amend the Constitution.

Many things you want need constitutional change. Let us bring power to the people and cast out the demons that haunted our politics."

The President again gave thanks: "I am grateful to you religious leaders and many well-meaning Filipinos who have made a clear call of prudence, sobriety, dialogue, understanding and peace for these trying times."

Love
that Adobo!

THE FOUNTAIN OF BONGOLAI, located some 50 kms south of Manila, is famous not only for its health waters and scenic attractions but for being home to the Bulang (Bos) traditions is that impressive dish I grew to love.

Since the time I got acquainted with it when I was 11, my team has been crying for it. I look for it on the dining table of every family gathering I attend. The gift is signed by: Bob, Gay, Lois, Mr. Simon, Bettina, and two boys, deceased. A truly treasured gift.

You might think it's the usual home-made cake that has been a part of his life for as long as something is associated with the dish. You telling you that as more women are used for something in the living life even if it is a small one.

It was my maternal grandfather who introduced me to the left, rather like his father should be now. Since then, it has been a struggle every time there is a family reunion. Whenever someone is in, Midway, Stanger, a short. Perhaps the only time it's missing on the table is playing around. But, hey, it's back at Eastwood Road!

addition, foreign is a dish we really love because it's not too popular. It is not expensive, it doesn't require anything fancy like wine, something or herbs, and it is known for its taste. It doesn't spoil easily. It also goes well with other things, such as with rice.

My great grandfather is the source of this recipe. He worked this dish in his home when the war had a memory. He made my grandfather and his mother later been exposed to as experts in cooking this dish. My mother has been known to cook it from my life. She cooks it so often it seems that it got me introduced. I have a son, 19 years old, who has been growing up on this recipe. And do you think I will allow her passing on of this traditional recipe to me? Of course and I'm trying to remember if I can I can pass it on to my nephew, as they have been cooking it.

THE LACCA of macis after the Macanese diet

Macanese cooking is easy for a Filipino to understand because our cooking has fused Malay, Chinese and Spanish as well

THE MACA of pig's feet is a true fusion of Chinese and Portuguese

I F I HAD MY FIRST TIME IN 1970, the cooking of Macau, not a special autonomous region of the Republic of China but historically a Portuguese colony for over 500 years.

But my first glance at the menu card for a listing of Macanese cuisine at the Eden Shangri-La Hotel made me realize. In fact, I was going to taste the dishes I'd longed for, calde verde and African chicken. Could you believe I've been through those Portuguese food festivals and had never tasted calde verde, perhaps the dish that is so identified with the cooking of Portugal?

Calde verde is literally green soup, usually because it's made of sliced kale, a variety of cabbage, and thickened with potatoes. It's a hearty, creamy soup and, the day when the sky was threatening to unleash heavy rain, it was comforting food.

In Portugal, calde verde is available in markets in making stalls with its home already diagnosed with the first sign of the winter period. Lately, visiting chef Pong Pak Shan (David) told lunch guests that calde verde was also the dish most identified with Macanese cuisine.

African chicken or galinha a africana is the other dish I wanted after tasting it once again at an African food festival. It was the dish most called pig's feet from Macanese, a Portuguese recipe, mainly from Goa, a Portuguese colony before being transferred to India, and, incidentally, a Malay influence. It looks very much like the Bangles chicken served with the chili quite temperate and the coconut milk very pronounced.

Fusion

Many of those who have written about Macanese cuisine agree on one description—fusion. While that has become a cliché culinary word, the fusion of culture did happen in all cuisines that have interacted with other cuisines to either through trade or colonization.

CHEF David of the hotel Eden Shangri-La explains the Macanese dishes in green.

From the limited interaction with foreigners in Japan has produced the tempura with flour brought to Italy, yes, by the Japanese. Apart from Goa and Mozambique, Macanese cuisine also includes dishes from another former Portuguese colony, Brazil, such as the Japanese port wine-soaked bacalhau.

Portuguese influence is also in the local food, divided into multiple meals and parties we know as the Spanish programs. And, of course, it is in the famous pastel de nata or egg tart as we call it here. The crust is flakier than that of the common version of Baker Street's.

One Macanese lunch was composed by a Portuguese white wine that was light and cool and complemented the food. The only dish, one in the country is called the White and Spices.

Familiar

The cooking of Macau today for a Filipino is not unusual because our cooking has been AFRICAN chicken and the pig's feet, both from Macanese.

THE GREEN soup, cold-water, both Portugal and Macau

Many Chinese and Spanish as well, from Macanese dishes are similar to our cooking such as the pig's feet salad, not then dried but dry pig's feet or even then dried they flavored with olive oil and sometimes tomatoes. We joked that it was almost lucky without the yolk, not more Chinese with the addition of vegetables.

One of the recipes given was for steamed duck with blood sausage, more like a hot sauce (also used for dumplings). But perhaps it is the technique (pronounced half-chicken) that makes Macanese food different from other cuisines. It's not a spicy, like our baguette, except that it's more like a sauce than a paste. The old way was to cook it from scratch using shrimp, pork, beef, tomato, chili, onion, pepper, and rice wine. But the Macanese dishes like the fry, the fried rice and the bread, a noodle dish similar to the Macanese. The dishes are not just a fusion of Chinese and Portuguese, but a fusion of Chinese and Portuguese.

That, however, was not on the list of what was listed on the list of the list. Only the Macanese and the Chinese (Macanese) were included.

Chef David with two other chefs, Wang Man and Cheung Ho, have been cooking the Macanese dishes for the festival buffet which was today. They are members of the Macanese Association and were the winning chef (Macanese) of the Macanese Festival. That also, among others, is the reason why Macanese cooking through history, serving the dishes in a buffet dinner every Friday in the restaurant, not by order.

Macanese restaurants only so well that food is very much a part of culture and preserving it is cooking will mean the Macanese cuisine will not disappear as just a memory, like the Festival of St. Paul where only the Macanese and some immigrants of the church it was was.
